HEARING HELD BY SELECTMEN

A preliminary hearing was held by Mattapoisett Selectmen at their last Tuesday's meeting in regard to filling the southeast corner of Black Duck Pond at Brandt Beach. Mrs. Jessie Genensky had requested permission to fill this area.

Two petitions were received by the Selectmen, one signed by 43 persons favoring the request and the other with 38 signatures opposing the request. Of the 40 present at the hearing, the majority were against the filling. Mrs. Genensky said the purpose of the fill was to provide access to the beach. No decision was made by Selectmen as the State Department of Naural Resources will have to be consulted.

Those in favor of the request said that in filling this area it would eliminate the stench from the pond and would provide a beach access. A spokseman for the opposition said at Christmas this year.

Mrs. Kenneth Moore, first vice-president, advised members that the new yearbooks would be ready very soon and mailed to all members.

Mrs. John L. MacNeil, chairman of the Art Committee, hopes to have a display at coming meetings showing work done by club members and asked any interested members to contact her.

New members introduced by the president included: Miss Edith Allanach, Mrs. J. Newton Barrows, Mrs. Edwin A. Whitehouse, Mrs. David W. Johns, Mrs. Francis Mead, Mrs. Robert Mower, Mrs. John M. Ranney, Mrs. William Saltonstall and Mrs. D. Stuart Mac Intyre. Other new members not present are Mrs. Edward C. Brainard, 2nd, Mrs. Margaret De Costa, Mrs. David Palamountain and Mrs. Harvey L. Williams.

Mrs. Nowak told members that two things stressed at the State Federation of Women's Clubs at Swampscott by Mrs. William H. Hasebroock, president of General Federation, were to stimulate and encourage a deeper patriotism in local communities and to strive to get prayer returned to our public schools. She also reminded all members of their civic duty to vote.

After the singing of "America", the meeting adjourned.

A THANK YOU

Mrs. Leo Lariviere is convalescing at her home on Church Street, Mattapoisett after surgery at St. Luke's Hospital, New Bedford. for the Junior Grange. This is a fine opportunity for boys and girls from the ages of 5 to 14 to become a member of a nation wide group of boys and girls.

They receive knowledge in ritualistic work, conducting meetings, program work, educational and community programs. All in all the Junior Grange is truly "a school out of school" and prepares the Juniors toward true manhood and womanhood.

Right now those having been trained and who have reached the required age and wish to advance in the order, have graduated into the Subordinate Grange.

This leaves many empty spaces so the matron, Mrs. Mildred LeBaron, and her assistants are appealing to the boys and girls to come into the Junior Grange. Members will be at the Grange Hall Saturday, September 17th, at 6 P.M. to enroll any new members. Boys and girls of surrounding towns can also join with this group.

The Junior Grange is well supervised by members of the Subordinate Grange. The lecturer and master-elect have the year's program made up for the ensuing year.

On Sunday, September 25th, a well trained installing suite from Northboro Junior Grange will be at the Hall at 2:30 P.M. to install master-elect Mark Harris and his officers for 1967. They will be accompanied by Past State Superintendent Hildred Brann. This meeting will be open to anyone wishing to see the fine work these young people can do.

So much can be said of this youth movement, sponsored by the Subordinate Grange in Mattapoisett. It has helped to train many boys and girls in the last 32 years to take their place in the world, facing any responsibilities placed upon them.

A Farm Boy's Memories of 100 Years Ago XV

Father's Uncle Ed Hammond was the first man in Mattapoisett to hire a Portugese emigrant to work for him. It was in the early '70's that these men from Portugal itself began to arrive in New Bedford and gradually fan out to work on the farms of the neighboring towns. (The earlier emigrants who came on the whalers were natives of the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands.)

This first one was followed by a succession of others. Father recalls them (as indeed does everyone who was privileged to know this older generation of Portugese who had left the old country for a chance in life) as uniformly decent, honest, thrifty folks who above all else were hard-working--hard-working to a degree almost unimaginable today. Another trait they had. They were hungry. Father's mother always said it took six months to fill up each of these new arrivals. She would place on the table before him a huge chunk of corned beef, a bowl of half a dozen boiled potatoes, two vegetable dishes of carrots or turnips or cabbage, and half a loaf of bread. He ate everything in sight. He was making up for 16 or 20 years of being hungry half or most of the time. He was also making the most of opportunities he would not have had in the old country. In return for hard work and honesty, he had enough to eat, a decent place to sleep, a chance to save a little money, to get a better job, and eventually own his own place, wed a wife, become a member of the community and eventually see his children get an education and take their places as respected citizens of his town.

But all farm workers ate huge meals compared to what so many of us eat today. Father could remember the lunches his mother put up when his Uncle Ed was going to cut wood on his woodlot on bitterly cold days in January. Everyone was up at five as usual; and while the boys did the chores, Ed hitched up the yoke of oxen, with a horse up front, to the big, flat double-runner sledge, and loaded on his axes, saws, and chains, hanging the lantern underneath up front.

Then breakfast, while Grandmother finished packing her husband's lunch: chunks of corned beef, a loaf of bread, a quart of coffee in a tin pail to be heated over a fire in the snow, and to finish off, two pies. Then off into the dark, harness bells tinkling, lantern light swinging, runners squeaking, and the breath of horse, oxen, and man steaming in the frigid air. Long after nightfall the team returned with a towering load of cordwood held onto the sledge by four long poles driven into brackets, two at the front and two at the rear.

Each summer Father's Uncle Ed not only mowed all the hay on his own land, but as was the custom dickered with those people who had fields of hay for which they had no use. One summer he made such a bargain with Mrs. Clelia Lega-Weeks, widow of Capt. Ansel Weeks. Jr. (about whom a story could, and, I hope, will be written) who lived in a house she called the Manse standing in what is now the north end of the Cushing Cemetery. Much later it was moved to its present location at the corner of Park Street and Acushnet Road. (In my boyhood we were sure it was haunted.)

Uncle Ed sent Father with a two horse mowing machine to cut the hay. It was a torrid July day, and Mrs. Weeks made a pitcher of lemonade for herself and her two daughters, Ethel and Oceana, the latter so named because she was born at sea.

Feeling sorry for the boy out in the broiling sun, Mrs. Weeks sent out one of the girls with a glass of lemonade for him. The girl came running through the hay, unaware of the long sharp blade. Father did not see her at first. When he did, she was almost in front of the blade. He stood up and leaned back on the reins, pulling the horses till they reared. The mowing machine stopped with the edge of the blade just touching the girl's long slender legs.

It could have cut them off like match sticks.

Two of the annual jobs of the farmer in those days were trips to the salt marshes to get salt hay and trips to the shore to get seaweed. For both of these, oxen were used instead of horses, particularly for mowing salt hay. The semi-hard mud of the salt marshes may hold up a man most of the time, but not the weight of an animal. Since the hoof of a horse spreads when it sinks into the mud and he tries to lift it out, he gets stuck. An ox's hoof, on the other hand, is cleft. When he pulls it up throug the sucking mud, it contracts and lifts free easily. Therefore a yoke of oxen was used to pull the mowing machine when mowing a salt marsh:

To get the new-cut salt hay on the wagon, two long, pointed poles were slid parallel under each row, and a man at each end lifted the load and carried it to the wagon. When a high load had been packed on, the oxen were yoked again to the wagon, the mowing machine was tied on behind, and they drove up the Neck Road and back to the farm. Here the salt hay was placed in mounds from whence it could be used the year 'round for bedding for the cattle.

Oxen were used in getting seaweed for much the same reason. The team had to be pulled through beach sand just above the row of seaweed brought in by wind and tide. The men pitched on a towering load of seaweed, but before turning homeward they piled on something else.

Millions of scallops also lined the shore in the fall. Nobody wanted them, for in those days they were still considered poisonous to humans. But ten or a dozen bushels were heaped on top of the seaweed. When the team returned home, the seaweed was used to bank up the farmhouse to keep the winter winds from whistling in under the floors. The scallops were thrown to the hogs.

Have your old suits reached retirement age?

Tips from us and Michaels/Stern

SURE, we all like to hold on to a rainy-day suit—but beware of having a whole closet full.

Yank out a suit if it has a shiny seat, if it has permanent bumps at the knees, if it is frayed at the buttonholes, if your cleaner winces every time you bring it in for repairs.

Take stock of what you've got. If you find your wardrobe wanting, come on in. We've got a lot to show you—from Michaels/Stern—that's one sketched here.
